This meter likewise never came into general use. The only other dry meter of sufficient importance to be mentioned, is that constructed by Defries. In this instrument, each of the three measuring chambers of which it is composed, is separated from the others by a flexible partition formed of leather, partially defended from the chemical action of the gas, by metal plates. This flexible partition is expanded by the pressure of the gas, and in the alternate expansion and contraction, it forms a cone. Now as a cone is one-third part of a cube, one-third part of the surface only, is available to the pressure of the gas. Independently of the loss of power thus occasioned, a further loss arises from the sides of the flexible partition being fixed, and the centre only being moveable, and registering by its motion the gas consumed. Further, if where the leather is attached to the sides of the case, there be a play of TVth of an inch between the plates and the line of attachment of the leather, in the backward and forward motion, it passes through Jth of an inch; thus, when by use and exposure to the atmospheric air, the leather has contracted only-aVnd of an inch, then in its motion it passes through this-r, th part of an inch, the effect of which is, that the measuring chamber is diminished by this TVth of an inch, over the whole diaphragm....
