Faith and reason are like two wings on which the human spirit rises to the contemplation of truth (Pope St. John Paul II, Fides et Ratio, 1998). The goal of this document is to provide our army with better weapons by explaining why we believe what we believe about the subjects presented below. Part I: Both pro-choice and pro-life groups have argued forcefully to defend their respective positions for and against abortion. Frequently, however, persons on both sides have used ambiguous terminology, incoherent argumentation, and even appeals to emotion to convey their message. The following contribution to the ongoing discussion is a pro-life position built from the ground up, written primarily for the benefit of pro-life leadership. Part I aims to show that an argument in favor of abortion cannot have the mother as its starting point because such an argument begins at Question 6 without sufficiently addressing Questions 1 through 5. Part II: Today, there are some who argue for the personhood of certain animals...
