The hour approachd with swift but silent pace, Which brought the nineteenth birth-day. Twas a time Of genral merriment. Alonzo sole Appeard not to partake his childrens joy. They guesd not at the cause, but thought belike Some slight indisposition, and essayd To chase the frown of sadness from his brow. The father knew the time advand apace, When separation, foe to kindred love, Must rust the link that bound them each to each, And this it was that causd his inward grief. Long had he musd upon-the mournful hour That should the band of union disentwine, In lacit melancholy. --This was nigh. --Alonzo of pecuniary store Had frugal plenty, still he could not give An ample competence to either child. One eve, emerging from her vestal couch, And chasing dusky twilight from the world, The moon beamd smiling. Silent...
